

Simple advice on helping a child start reading...

During the first years at primary school, as children get to grips with the basics of reading, our main role as parents is to make the most of regular opportunities for practising reading outside of school AND, most importantly, to make sure that reading remains a fun and interesting activity our children WANT to do.

- Reading TO our children - Even if your child has reached the point where he can attempt to read some books on his own, it's really important to continue reading to him just as you always have - with a cuddle and with no pressure to perform. As he struggles with the early stages of learning to read it's easy for a child to forget that books are an enjoyable part of life. Bedtime stories remind everyone of this.
- Home reading practice - Nearly all UK primary schools send home books for children to practise reading. Your input here is absolutely essential! Like all new skills, whether it's cycling a two-wheeler or tying her laces, the more minutes of practice that are put in, the better your child will master reading. If she is reluctant, suggest you start the story off, or you read every other page. Help your child understand this is a joint enterprise and not a test. Ten minutes a day (rather than half an hour twice a week), is perfect - any more and your child might get turned off.
- Focus on meaning - At school a lot of attention is given to letter sounds and word-level skills in the early stages of reading. Home is the perfect place to focus on the meaning of a book. Discuss the characters, their feelings, the pictures, what might happen next and make links with other stories or programmes your child has enjoyed.
- Words all around us - Your child will have certain letters, sounds or 'tricky' words to practise reading at home. This can be turned into a game. Can they find those letters or words on a cereal box? On the pages of a favourite story? On signs in the local area, such as the playground?
- Scrapbooks - Would your child like to make a scrapbook of real football headlines with photos of the players alongside? Or of Disney princess pictures and story titles? Children will return to this kind of interest-led scrapbook time and again, perfecting their reading skills as they do so!
